All plans require Telkom voice line and a modem

Shaped: Some packets of data are delayed by the ISP so that other (more important) packets of data can get through faster. Can slow things down.

Unshaped: All data packets are treated the same, regardless of application. In practice, this should mean the downloading is faster in peak times.

Semi shaped: Only unshaped during certain hours

Uncapped: No limits on the amount of data downloaded (or uploaded) per month.

Half price off (or more!) of stuff you really want.

Things to know:

Telkom additional cost of ADSL lines is as follows:

- 384 kbps : R 152 per month
- 512 kbps : R 326 per month
- 1024 kbps : R 413 per month

All plans require Telkom voice line and a modem

Shaped: Some packets of data are delayed by the ISP so that other (more important) packets of data can get through faster. Can slow things down.

Unshaped: All data packets are treated the same, regardless of application. In practice, this should mean the downloading is faster in peak times.

Semi shaped: Only unshaped during certain hours

Uncapped: No limits on the amount of data downloaded (or uploaded) per month.

Half price off (or more!) of stuff you really want.
A deal a day ...but you'll only catch it if enough people sign up to buy it... Click here to read more

How to get connected?

Step 1: Use The Broadband Bible to choose the line speed, ISP, and package that suits your needs.

Step 2: If your package does not include an ADSL line, and you do not already have one, you need to have one installed. An ADSL line is an upgrade to a regular land line, so you need to get one of those first. Then upgrade to an ADSL line of the right speed. Go to <https://secure1.telkom.co.za/edsl/eds1ff> or call 10215.

Step 3: If your ISP does not provide you with an ADSL router, you will need to buy one.

Step 4: Sign up for the ISP package of your choice. Please be sure to tell the ISP you found them in The Broadband Bible!

Glossary

Broadband Loosely used to describe high-speed, always-on Internet access, generally 384kbps or faster .

ADSL (Asymmetric Digital Subscriber Line) A method for moving data at high speeds over normal phone lines. An ADSL circuit is much faster than a dial-up phone connection, and the wires coming into the subscriber's premises are the same (copper) wires used for regular phone service.

ISP (Internet Service Provider) A company that offers its customers access to the Internet, charging either a monthly fee or a per-gigabyte fee or both.

Shaped If internet access is shaped, some packets of data are delayed by the ISP so that other (more important) packets of data can get through faster. The ISP uses shaping to optimize the use of their network, generally by prioritising basic web browsing over downloading and other high-intensity usage. The exact nature of the prioritisation may vary from provider to provider.

Unshaped If internet access is unshaped, all data packets are treated the same, regardless of application. In practice, this should mean the downloading is faster in peak times, since data packets related to downloading files would not be delayed to let through gaming or browsing packets.

Cap (bandwidth cap) Refers to an ISP limiting usage of the connection. Generally measured in gigabytes per month.

Uncapped An uncapped ISP plan places no limits on the amount of data downloaded (or uploaded) per month.

Topup An extra charge (generally per gigabyte of data transferred) for additional internet access once the cap has been used up for the month.

Gig (gigabyte) A billion bytes, or a million kilobytes, or a thousand megabytes.

Bandwidth A term used to describe how much data you can send through a connection to the Net. The greater the bandwidth, the faster the rate of data transmission.

Line speeds ADSL lines come in three speeds: 384 kbps, 512 kbps, and 1024 kbps (which can be up to 4 Mbps). These speeds are a function of the line provided by Telkom rather than the ISP. Of course, faster lines mean more bandwidth, which means that ISP packages for faster lines are generally more expensive, especially for uncapped access.

Kbps (kilobits per second) A measure of how fast data is transferred.

Mbps (megabits per second) 1000 kbps.

Contention ratio The number of people using the ISP's bandwidth that is nominally allocated to a single user. Since you are not using all of your bandwidth all of the time, it does not make sense for the ISP to pay for all your international bandwidth all of the time either – so they share it out with other users. The higher the contention ratio, the greater the number of users that may be trying to use the actual bandwidth at any one time and, therefore, the lower the effective speed, especially at peak times.

Local-only traffic Since the internet is global, for most people most of their traffic will be international (i.e. looking at or downloading something stored on a computer in another country). International bandwidth is expensive, which has led ISP's to offer local-only options, meaning that you will only be able to access the small part of the internet located in South Africa. This may be fine if you only use email from your company's server, for example. It is generally used by people who move large files between computers in South Africa.

Modem / router The router is the device that send and receives packets of data to and from the internet. It's the box that plugs into your phone jack so you can access the internet.

Wireless ADSL comes in via your copper phone cables to your router. However, some ADSL routers have the option of then transferring the data to your computer(s) wirelessly, so you don't have to plug your computer into the router. Most newer laptops and several newer desktops have the ability to receive this wireless data built-in.

WiFi The most popular wireless protocols. Most wireless routers (and most laptops and desktops with wireless built-in) will work with the WiFi protocols without any additional hardware or software.

Satellite This refers to the transmission of data (by the ISP, in the background) via satellite rather than via terrestrial cabling. Generally, this is cheaper but has greater delays, since the signal has to be sent thousands of kilometres into space and back before it reaches you.

Fibre This refers to the transmission of data (by the ISP, in the background) via fibre-optic cable rather than via copper cabling or satellite. Generally, this is more expensive but has the smallest delays, since fibre allows the fastest effective data transmission.

A NOTE TO THE ISPs:

Please help us provide the South African Internet user with the most comprehensive guide to ADSL plans possible.

Non-listed ISPs

If you represent an ISP that is not listed in The Broadband Bible, please submit your details to us so we can include you as soon as possible (there is no charge for being included in The Broadband Bible). This is the process:

1. Download the Excel spreadsheet from our website that lays out how you should submit your plan details to us. Please only use one sheet, with as many columns as is necessary. No plans without prices will be published.
2. Email the spreadsheet to us at info@thebroadbandbible.co.za.
3. Please ensure we have the contact details of the right person at your organisation, should we need to contact you with any questions. You can email those details to us at the above address.

Listed ISPs

If your plans are already listed in The Broadband Bible, and you would like to change or add some plans, please follow this process:

1. Download the Excel spreadsheet from our website, and fill in the required information. You must include information for ALL your plans, each time you make a change to any, so we suggest you save the spreadsheet and amend as required. We are specifically interested in the Shaped/Unshaped spec, as well as any "Notes" you think are relevant.
2. Email the spreadsheet to info@thebroadbandbible.co.za. Please ensure we have the contact details of the right person at your organisation, should we need to contact you with any questions. You can email those details to us at the above address.

A new version of the Bible is released on the first Monday of every month, or as necessary.
